"We, the girls of the Palladian Society, agree to form an organization for drill in debate and public speaking."

This is the preamble of the constitution of the Palladian Girls' Debating Club, which was organized in 1884, and which has aptly carried out the purpose for which it was formed. Its members consist of Palladian girls and such other girls as the club shall admit.

The questions discussed are those that are debated in the Palladian. During the year there have been twenty members of the club, and the part the ladies have sustained in the regular and general debates is a sufficient assurance of the good work of this club.

In the spring the club received a tangible recognition of effort in the shape of an annual ten dollar prize offered by Mr. Wilbur Knight, Univ., '86, under the following conditions:

I. The prize is to be given for the best production, be it essay, oration or poem, given by a member of the club from the Palladian platform during the year.

2. The Professors occupying the chairs of History, Literature and Modern Languages are to be the judges of the productions, which are to be judged from a literary standpoint only.

This magnanimous offer was accepted by the club, as it adds an extra inducement to persons about to join.

Meetings in Palladian Hall at 4:30 Friday afternoons.

GENERAL REMARKS.

At the beginning of the year 1885-6, in spite of the natural decrease in the number of old students, the society was left with fortyfour members, and during the year forty-nine names were added to the Palladian roll. But the society has rejoiced not so much in the number, as in the quality of its accessions. The hard work done for the society by the younger members, and their enthusiastic devotion to Palladian interests, has exceeded the society's most sanguine expectations. The harmony among members has remained unbroken. every Palladian, society welfare has been held superior to class feeling or clannish prejudice. The members have justly considered the society, as an organization combining both literary and social training, of greater value than any organization giving merely the social side of University life. Throughout the year the society has placed literary work as the end of its effort and has steadily adhered to this even when the parts of those detained by various causes had to be filled by extempore productions. A marked feature of the program has been the debates which have given valuable drill to both sexes, especially in extemporaneous speaking. The request fo alumn papers has thus far resulted in abundant promises and some tangible results. Much interest continues to be manifested in the plan and it is hoped the work already done will produce more abundantly in the coming year. The members of the society teel that its work entitles it to a large and permanent place in the University; they realize that the society exists for the good of its members and are determined to maintain its already high standard.

ANTI-FRATERNITY AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

At the beginning of the college year 1884-5 there were some fourteen Palladians who were members of fraternities. three fraternities represented were agressive in proportion to their strength, and the outsiders were inevitably suspicious of them from the first. The anti-fraternity men, both in the Palladian and Union societies, did energetic though unorganized work to prevent the spread of the secret and exclusive Hellenism. After patient collection of what seemed impartial testimony from all sources open to them, they came to certain conclusions, of which only the following need be noticed here: (1) It is best for colleges and for the individual students therein that active, open literary societies should exist; (2) Wherever the secret fraternities have become strong they have killed the literary societies, or have utterly destroyed their usefulness; (3) The same tendency is already apparent here, and the danger calls for decisive action. It was found that the old rivalry between the literary societies had been broken down, that the confidence in each other had been destroyed, and that work for the society was done mainly as it might or might not have some influence in the factional struggle between the "frats" and "barbs." On October 24th there were submitted to the society amendments to the constitution which forbade future Palladians to belong to secret fraternities, but made no change in the status of those already members. On the following Saturday evening a meeting for all students was called to meet in the chapel to discuss these amendments and like ones that had been offered in the Union. Though some fraternity men were present, they refused to do anything except report the proceedings. The non-fraternity men brought forth their evidence, stated their position, and adjourned. Friday evening, October 31st, after a warm debate. the Palladian Society passed the amendments by a vote of fortyto seventeen. At this time, or soon after, most of the defeated party withdrew. Their loss was something of a blow to the society, but was by no means so dangerous as their continued presence as an organization would have been.

PALLADIAN

In the fall term of 1871 soon after the opening of the University the Palladian society, the oldest in the University, was organized by a small number of male students. They secured the room now occupied by the medical department and, fitting it up with a lamp, two or three chairs, a president, and other bric a-brac, commenced work.

Many difficulties were at first encountered, but with characteristic Pall grit the society flourished and after secretly borrowing the library dictionary, were able to choose the motto which they still use, "Forma Mentis Æterna Est," which is literally translated, "It's a cold day when the Palls get left."

In 1873, owing to sundry misunderstandings, part of the members withdrew and formed the Adelphian. The Palladian was however the stronger, and after much trouble succeeded in purchasing a carpet and a piano and added a new attraction in the admission of ladies to membership.

Nothing more of consequence happened until in '76 nearly all the members withdrew, leaving but a handful of freshmen and preparatory students. The outlook was very gloomy, but it brightened when the truant members returned, and as of old the prodigals were killed and the fatted calf made happy.

In 1880 the present hall was fitted up at an expense of four thousand dollars, more or less, and the piano was tuned. Since then the society has paid off its debt by means of lec ture courses and is now planning further improvements.

Permanent features are the yearly exhibition, given during Commencement week, and the Chase and Wheeler Oratorical Contest. The society has also developed two auxilliaries, the Palladian Girls' Debating Club and the Palladian Boys' Debating Club. These and other matters of importance are left for other parts of this work.
